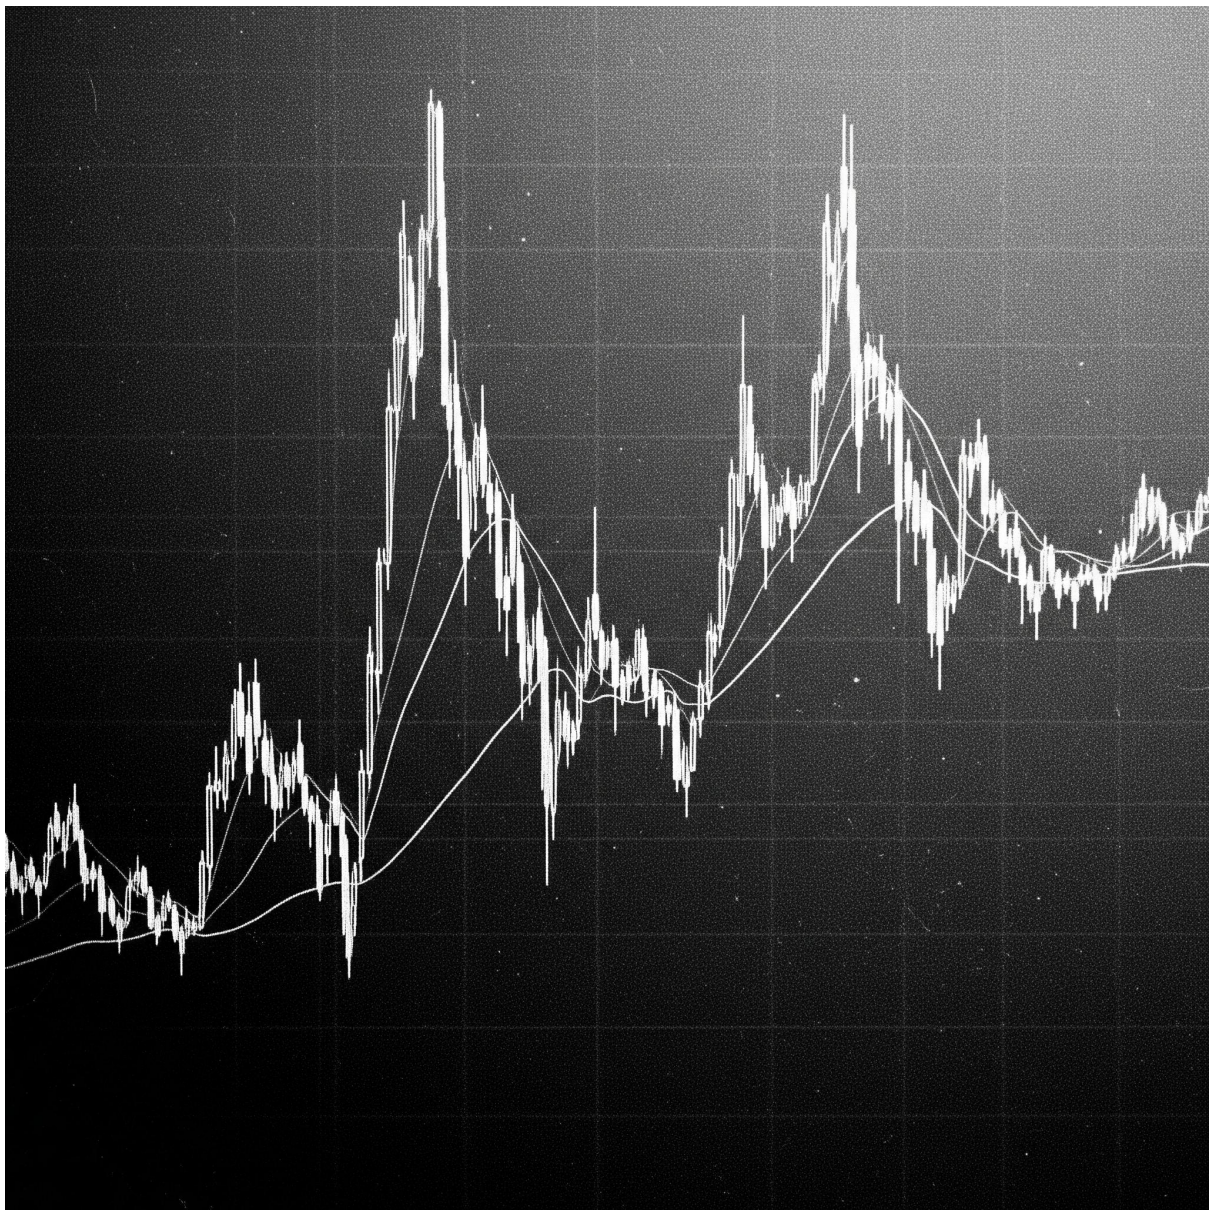
The Crypto Times

Billy Bitcoin TOMORROW'S MONEY, YESTERDAY'S HEADLINES

MT. GOX FILES FOR BANKRUPTCY!!

Hundred of thousands of Bitcoin stolen



Reports say the exchange may have lost around 744,000 bitcoins, worth about $350 million at the time, because of a security loophole.

February 28, 2014

Mt. Gox, once one of the largest bitcoin exchanges in the world, has filed for bankruptcy protection in Japan. This comes just days after the site suddenly went offline, leaving users confused and unable to access their funds.

Earlier this month, Mt. Gox had already stopped customers from moving bitcoin to other exchanges due to technical issues.

The company's CEO said he was working on a solution, but no clear answers were given. Now, it's been revealed in court that the company owes around about £38 million.

Reports say the exchange may have lost around 744,000 bitcoins, worth about $350 million at the time, because of a security loophole. The company's lawyers filed for protection shortly after U.S. regulators issued a subpoena.

The bankruptcy has caused bitcoin's price to fall. A single bitcoin is now worth about $561, down from a high of $1,000 back in November.

Mt. Gox's shutdown is one of the biggest scandals in crypto so far, and it's raising big questions about how safe digital money really is.